Qipao artist Chen Liyun has stuck to craftsmanship for 37 years

She tells the story of oriental elegance with needle and thread

By Chen Jiayi

In Changjiang town, Rugao there is a Qipao workshop, hidden in a house, with no obvious sign on the door. However, a lot of people go there to order qipao. The owner of the workshop is Chen Liyun. In the past 37 years, she has stuck to craftsmanship, making tailored qipao with oriental charm for customers with needle and thread.

‘It is the third day making the qipao. It is the final stage.’ Chen Liyun said that she was very focused when making qipao, from design to completion, the most important thing is non stop. ‘Clients come, then from measuring, tailoring to design and making, the process is continuous, and inspiration and feel are both essential.’

That year, 18- year- old Chen Liyun went to Beijing with her family. Learning to do qipao was just one of her choices of making a living. However, in learning and making day after day, oriental beauty in qipao attracted her.

‘The more I get in touch with it, the more I am devoted to it.’ Chen Liyun said that every type of fabric and shape of qipao, every pattern and Pan Kou have different meanings. Different matches can present unique charm, but the same thing is that they all present tranquility and modesty of oriental women.

On Chen Liyun’ s qipao display shelf, there is a mid-length qipao made with blue calico. It is her representative work of realizing her dream.

‘After I returned to Rugao, I got to know Nantong blue calico.’ Chen Liyun said, blue calico has simple and beautiful patterns, most of them are from birds, animals, flowers, grass, trees and legends and myth, with good meanings. It is an excellent choice for qipao which needs no more embroidery.

Acting with no delay, she used blue calico to make an tailored ancient qipao for her friend. Collision and integration of beauty of local culture and beauty of qipao, made it recognized by market once it was launched. Now it has become a popular product of Chen Liyun’ s workshop.
